Simulation as an educational tool to improve organizational and health processes in high-performance teams

Clinical simulation has become an important tool in all health and educational organizations at national and international level. This has led to a rise in the number of facilities and the amount of equipment available for simulations, as well as increasing numbers of professionals involved in training programmes, including simulation-accredited instructors.

Clinical simulation brings together knowledge of the clinical setting, psychology and pedagogy, and can help to improve the organizational processes of health and clinical teams.
